The Nature Explorer's Scavenger Hunt Song

Something thin, something tall,
Something big, something small.

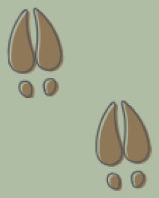
Something young, something old,
Something that prefers the cold.

Something buzzing, flapping wings,
Far away a songbird sings.

Turtles basking, fishes swim,
Something that is always green.

Something you can take back home,
Something better left alone.

Something smooth, something rough,
Something stuck to your pant cuff.



Something making a loud sound,
Another falls softly to the ground.

Something rustles in the bush,
Something heard when people hush.

Something creepy, something crawly,
Something that is smooth and rolly.

Sticks and rocks, and jumping frogs,
Vernal pools and muddy bogs.

Something wet, something dry,
Something that can make you cry.

Something carried by the wind,
Something that will make you scream.

Something slimy, something shiny,
Something red and something grimy.

These and more you'll find outside,
Go exploring far and wide!

The Nature Explorer's Scavenger Hunt Song © 2019 by The Science Women and Iana Nikolova. More info at www.thesciencewomen.com